"Fired" for Advertising

The doctors' trust promises to get a severe jolt in the effort of the State Medical association to discipline Dr. Woodson of St. Joseph. Dr. Woodson's crime, for which the association proposes to "fire" him, lies in the fact that he advertised in a newspaper. It seems that the doctor specializes in some human disorder, and rather than keep the matter a secret, or gumshoe his way without cost into the news columns of the papers, he was frank enough to buy legitimate advertising space and pay for it. The doctor's colleagues at St. Joseph, where he is best known, propose to fight the resolution of the judicial council of the State Medical association in its efforts to remove the St. Joseph man from the sacred precincts of that ethical body. We trust that the better class of physicians in Missouri will join Dr. Woodson and move to drop the pernicious and wholly unsound theory that it is unethical to advertise legitimately in newspapers. The best stores advertise good goods, the best factories advertise their products, but only the worst doctors are supposed to buy honest space. It is time for the leaders in this noble profession to assert themselves and to break down the barriers that surround their so-called trust. When a Dock discovers a serum, the papers are supposed to print columns about it, and they always do, freely, cheerfully, but if some hustling, earnest young doctor wishes to advertise honestly, he is "fired" or branded as a fakir.—St. Louis Times.
